Thomas Conroy '79 Leads Company's Global Push for Solar Energy Exec Leads Company's Global Push for Solar

The journey of Thomas Conroy '79 – from lead startup engineer of the first coal-fired plant in the Dominican Republic to provider of wind and solar power in the U.S. and beyond – may seem as remarkable as his migration from Westfield, New Jersey to the high arid plains of New Mexico.

The new president of Array Technologies, a solar tracking systems company based in Albuquerque, Conroy has spent... Read more.

A conversation with...Maureen McBirney '14

What do you do professionally?

I am a manufacturing engineer for Tesla Motors. This involves creating and maintaining assembly line layouts and processes for various Tesla battery products. It also means I help facilitate communication between the production team and the rest of the engineering teams at Tesla. I mostly work at the main Tesla factory in Fremont, CA, but I have also worked on some projects at the Tesla Gigafactory, which is currently being constructed in Sparks, NV.

What part of your job do you most enjoy?

I love manufacturing engineering because.... Read more.

Meet Matthew Heinrich '16

"I have learned from four years on this team that the journeys you go through with your teammates and the adversity you collectively overcome is what you will really care about when it is all said and done. I wouldn't trade my tennis experience for anything."
